GEORGIA probishnists demand that all public officials who think probishn a failure, resign. We concur. The two classes who really believe in probishn are the bootleggers, and the dry cops, both of whom drink; and make merry, and a holy show of Uncle Sam.

RUSSIA veers to the right. Stalin will pay labor according to accomplishments; the intelligent will be fostered. Red Russia finds putting a premium on stupidity, ignorance, won't work. The Communists of America will find the same.

WHEN the dentists begin to take out one's teeth,—the final real ones—by the dozen, it is time to look love in the face, and to appreciate what one is pretty sure of. George Washington is said to have ceased his amours when they fitted him with wooden ones that were held by a spring. You can see them in the National Museum in Washington. I have. Martha began then to have her just inning. Of course, George is said to have caught his death of cold fleeing in his nightgown. All that did not prevent him from being one of the most admirable gentlemen, and bravest, one of the most sensible and astute Americans who ever lived. As to the cherry tree, he probably was learning grafting, instead of just taking a hack for hatred of cherries.

SHAW is in Russia. He has never been in America, but draws eighty thousand dollars a year in play and book royalties from us. It may be he's subject to sea-sickness.

FORD is a machine; believes, only, in machines. He makes men into machines. He will be counted, in forty years, as a queer phenomenon of the speed generation, a lopsided type without humane emotions, a throwback in an industrial age to a slave plantation era. But, his remarkable fashion of manufacture and sale will be amplified a hundred fold all over the world. He happened to be in gear when the time was ripe for cheap, universal motor transport.

BIG business and finance ran amuck for nigh on ten years. Now, it is running a-wry.

Edward Weston: An Estimate

by MERLE ARMITAGE

Prophecies about art and artists are as futile and often as inaccurate as those about politics or international affairs. A number of recently published books take a rather pessimistic attitude about contemporary aesthetic matters. In spite of these reactionary viewpoints this writer holds contrary views. When, I should like to inquire, has there been so much activity, so many fine minds concerned with creative matters, so much written about art, so much art of a new order exhibited and produced?

No one questions the fact that a wholly illogical percentage of the world's output of painting, sculpture and allied arts is valueless. But it takes only a few men in each generation to create new landmarks.

Notwithstanding the seemingly overwhelming invasion of modern French art, American art is making vastly greater strides than ever before. It is as though the resistance brought to bear against a great tide were a necessary factor to its advancement.

One of the men speaking clearly for the new aesthetics is Edward Weston. A retrospective exhibition of the photography of this unique man is to be held at Denny-Watrous Gallery—the first showing of its kind. I have seen much of his former work at various times, but I should like to see it assembled in chronological order as Carmel will see it.

Here is growth without forcing, development that is natural, logical and sure. Mastery won through evolution, not revolution—and mastery it surely is!

Here will be shown just how Weston arrived at the striking, sincere and powerful photographs which are today taking their rightful place in the American scene. His gropings are there, and his half-successes. His failures and occasional triumphs are all frankly dis-

Play-Reading Tonight

The successful Philip Barry play "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" after a season on Broadway and a recent run in San Francisco, will be read tonight by Carol Eberts Veazie. This form of entertainment is especially popular on the Coast as so many of the current New York successes never reach the West. Tonight's reading in the Greenroom of the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough will be doubly attractive to Peninsula audiences both because of the popularity of the play to be read and the established artistic reputation of the reader.

played, as he moved on to more complete understanding, more truthful fulfillment.

A great many books will someday be written about this modest man. Let us take pleasure now in knowing him in the fullness of his present maturity, realizing that even more lofty eminences are yet ahead for him. I envy Carmel that exhibition!

Weston's exhibit—in the Denny-Watrous Gallery—will open with a reception Monday evening.

PICNIC

Guests at a picnic held at the deserted Indian village in Del Monte Forest yesterday included Mr. and Mrs. George W. Baker and their children, Carmencita, George and Jerry, of Piedmont; Mrs. Murdock Wingfield and daughter, of San Francisco, Mrs. Carl A. Bachelder and Mrs. Bachelder, Jr., of San Francisco and Pebble Beach; Mrs. Frederick Calkins and niece, Miss Audrey Martin; Mrs. W. H. Davis and daughter, Miss Nadine Davis of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Falconer G. Cruickshank of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. George S. Seward and Billy Seward of Beverly Hills, and Miss Virginia Law of San Francisco.

REMINISCENCE

Alex Francis, famous character actor, who has been the guest of Mrs. Lewis Pierce at the Monterey Peninsula Country Club, delighted a group at the picnic with reminiscences of his early days on the stage. An ardent golfer, Mr. Francis takes an active interest in the many recreational advantages of the Peninsula.

IN RUSSIA

Word comes from Ella Winter (Mrs. Lincoln Steffens) that she has been joined in Moscow by Lady Astor and George Bernard Shaw, and together they will "do" Russia. Ella Winter is getting final data for a book to be brought out in the fall, and has been engaged by the Universal Service to do a series of special articles for syndication in the Hearst papers.

AT DEL MONTE

Recent Del Monte arrivals include Mrs. James King Steele of San Francisco and her daughter, Miss Peggy Steele; Mrs. W. H. Thayer of Palo Alto; Mrs. Walton N. Moore and Miss Elizabeth Moore and Mrs. Henry D. Nichols of Piedmont and Mr. Francis Brown of Honolulu, California State Golf champion who will compete in the Pebble Beach championship which began yesterday.

HILLSBOROUGH CONCERTS

The open air concert in the Woodland Theatre, next Sunday afternoon will be conducted by Pierre Monteux, who arrived this week from Paris. Monteux first came to America in 1916 as conductor for the Russian Ballet. For two seasons following he was at the Metropolitan in New York and in 1919 became conductor of the Boston Symphony, which he directed for five years.

A BULGARIAN SCULPTOR IN CALIFORNIA

by GLORIA STUART

Atavas Katchamakopf, a modern Bulgarian sculptor, is exhibiting his work this month at the Legion of Honor Palace in San Francisco. Katchamakopf studied in Sofia, Berlin, Munich, Rome, and Paris, winning several international prizes abroad. He came to New York in 1924, and has been in this country ever since. He is now at Palm Springs, where, in 1929, he opened a studio and art gallery.

The finest piece shown here is a head of Christ carved in wood. Finely stylized, his concept of the Christ is overpowering. The face is not calm in aspect or full of infinite piety. The cast down eyes, lined face, and cruel ecstasy of the mouth exhibit a tortured soul. But strangely, from the head as a whole, radiates an inner joy.

An old Plowman, a plaque in relief, is full of advancing motion. The attitudes of the horse and plowman are purposeful and momentous. There is an earthly depth in the contours of the plowed soil and bending figures.

One of the best subjects is that of madonnas and children. His "Peasant Madonna and Child" is the most grotesque of similar groups shown. Flaming curves of garments and body synthesize themselves into startling postures. The hands, arms, legs, and feet of the mother surround the child awkwardly. The impression is given of the eternal cycle of parenthood.

A second madonna and child is classic in its simplicity of line. Here the mother in strict angularity, creates the traditional S composition by turning her head away from her body and shielding the child, her left hand is raised in a beneficent gesture.

The third madonna, in bronze, and without a child, is aesthetically perfect. Her whole body proudly curves toward one in a most satisfying flow. Every line is modelled to complete this surging intality. The posture is reminiscent of the "Women of Oxaca" by Henrietta Shore and contains the same rhythmic excellence.

"Katchamakopf is a stylist but his sculptures have stylized the rhythm of life itself. His form organizations are built with a most engaging and subtle simplicity. Non-essentials are eliminated with amazing intuitive power plus an equally astonishing technical facility. The resultant effect on the beholder is an admixture which beauty invariably inspire."

By THE GADFLY

Up and anon. Thoughts while meandering. In my dolce far niente moments, read society flares in Pacific Grove weekly sheet. Page scintillated with a bit of classical debauch launched in our midst. After a eugenic seance at our local Cinematorium, bevy of girlets flitted to their hearth and lent their helixes (can't trap me—it's spelt—belices tambien) to one of blind Homer's unsung elegiacs—"Syckie at the Cess-Pool." (vide "Grove at High Tide.") Alas, a wave of nostalgia engulfed me. To think that someone is fragrantly thinking of me—Poor Demure Gadfly. What a soiree it must have been. "Syckie at the Cess-Pool" after witnessing a fictional spree on Birth-Control. How beautiful and logical the continuity of it all is. I just must surcease—lachrymal gulps heave heavy about my tentacles. Poor Syckie.

Another anachronism on the Avenue or is it? A Jack-Ass, donkey or mule—I confess my ignorance on ornithology—was seen driven by some human who walked proudly by its side turning his head to the right and left in order to let the bewildered recognize the racial distinction. The most intelligent was a canine balancing itself on a pack on the Jack-Ass, Donkey or Mule or what have you. To what base uses these animals (and I mean all of them) come. Why did they come here? Gypsies, donkeys—now what's next?

The ennui of the settlement was punctured the other evening by newsyblastings. Two human calliopes leaped upon us during the late feed-bag period and screamed out their bold bluff inanities. Street-gammons, I groaned as I adjusted my food-crushers to make just one more vain effort to extract some chicken from a tenacious bone.
And was I incensed? And how. It's not often that I dine on poulet en friteau.
Gras-double aux haricots blancs make up my alimentary routine. Usual thing, says me with a Del Monte hauteur. I'm just bored with the commonplace; my ancestors came over on a rum-runner.
And now I read "Salome"; hobnob with the sophisticates; ape an Oxford accent and just declare that I mingle with the intelligentsia. I just can't suffer those low-brows. Well, that's that. I passed through that social ensemble at Del Monte all right. Was able to adjust my monocle enough to see that sunny boy kissing the Carmel grade nightie, nightie. See you anon.

SURVEYING BUSINESS

Can the future operation of the great mechanism of American business be protected against at least some of the painful and damaging effects of the extremes of alternating booms and panics through which it has been accustomed to pass periodically? Dr.
Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, sketches the ground on which hopes of modifying the excesses of the business cycle are now being built up, and will present them in detail in his radio talk, "Surveying Business," over the Columbia Broadcasting System next Sunday afternoon. The talk will be heard locally through station KFRC at three o'clock.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE THEATRE?

Adopting the suggestion made last week by Galt Bell, we present herewith the first of a series of comments on the state of the theatre drawn from sources outside of Carmel. The first selection has been made by Mr.
Bell himself.

Channing Pollock, author of "The Fool," is planning a tour of four road companies in his latest work for the stage "The House Beautiful." In an article for the newspapers of America he presents some reasons why "the road" is moribund. He calls his story "Times Square and America," and in it he is quite severe with Times Square.

"To the little group of people who work in Times Square," he says, "the rest of America is 'the road,' and that, I believe, is the chief reason 'the road' has ceased to exist for Times Square. Today, we are told there are practically no theatres available except in the large cities, and very little patronage for those that are available. Times Square blames 'the talkies.' When I was a boy Times Square blamed roller skating.
Whenever there is a slump in the theatrical business, everybody blames everything but the theatrical business." Pollock adduces as No. 1 reason for the loss of the road the bad quality of companies sent out as "original productions." "I insist," he says, "that every company should be a good company whatever it's number and wherever it goes; that its performance should be kept up to the mark, and that the theatre patron should be told exactly what he is buying when he buys it. Both in and out of New York the price of theatre tickets has been absurd. This isn't altogether the manager's fault; most of his costs have been equally absurd. A $6.60 theatre ticket is no more foolish than a $110 a week stage hand or a bad fiddler at $85 a week.

"When all is said and done, however, the theatre stands or falls chiefly by its plays. The greatest trouble of all is that plays are produced for Times Square, and that, whatever our little groups think about it, Times Square is NOT America.

"The road has divorced Times Square.
But, 'the road' is a long way from being dead. It is merely at the beginning of being independent. Some day the Little Theatre will be professionalized and organized, and its plays will be written for it by really important dramatists, placed under contract by groups that have literary understanding beyond the New Yorker. The success of the present movement to revive 'the road' is up to the managers. Unless they have learned something in the past few years, the next few will find Times Square continuing to produce for Times Square, and the rest of America with a theatre of its own."
